“Charter Schools” are public schools that provide instruction within a more flexible format than regular public schools. This flexibility comes from being exempt from much of the operating requirements (i.e. teacher union contracts, facility requirements, etc), although they do have to meet the state’s academic standards. They may be created and organized by a group of teachers, parents, community leaders or a community-based organization. Charter schools serve a wide-range of students depending on specific programming, ranging from youths exhibiting at-risk behavior or falling behind academically, those wanting vocational training, to college bound youth.

Profile of Student Served:
